What Do You Want?

“What do you want?” Have you asked that question of anyone lately? If you are a parent with children still living at home, you probably have. In this gift-giving season, we often ask our children, spouses, or other loved ones, “What do you want?” We do this because we love them and want them to be happy and pleased with their gifts. In my family growing up, Christmas was the one time of year when my parents would splurge and try to get us whatever we wanted and asked for (within reason). This was a tradition that my mother had carried over from her own childhood when her parents had done the same. She used to tell the story of my grandmother walking down a busy downtown sidewalk carrying a giant stuffed monkey because my mom, as a little girl, had asked for it. (You would have had to know my grandmother to know what a big deal that was.) Providing for our loved ones’ wants is often an act that we cherish because it is a way of showing our love for them.

But consider that God, as our heavenly Father, is more concerned with what we need than with what we want. He yearns for our prayers and listens to them attentively, but in answering them, provides what is best and most needed according to His infinite wisdom and perfect will. At times, that may be exactly what we had asked for, and at other times, it may be much different than our petition. You see, God’s way of showing His love for us is in caring for us as no one else can. He has met our greatest need through the sacrifice of His Son, and continues to meet our daily needs in a perfect way that will benefit our walk with Him and secure our hope for eternal life. There is no greater love than that! So, the next time that you take your petitions and requests before God, ask Him for the things that you want according to your understanding of your circumstances, but remember that God might have something much better prepared for you than you can even imagine. Accept His gifts with thanksgiving and praise, and submit to His will in meeting your needs.
