Silent Servants

In the work and life of every congregation of the Lord’s church, there are people whose roles and responsibilities are public in nature and cause them and their efforts to be “in the spotlight” - elders, deacons, ministers, worship leaders, and Bible class teachers, just to name a few. Their work is important to the well-being and success of the local church. Though they do not work to be seen by men, they are often recognized and acknowledged because of the necessary public nature of their responsibilities. They are (or should be) valued and appreciated for their faithful labor in the Lord’s kingdom.

There is also another category of servants that are just as important to the work of the Lord’s church. I call them “silent servants.” These are Christians who quietly work in the background, doing what needs to be done in a humble, selfless, and often sacrificial way. They are not looking for recognition or accolades and, in fact, are often very careful to not draw attention to themselves. They simply want to use their time, talents, and resources to serve the Lord. Over the last few days, I have been greatly encouraged by my interactions with some of those silent servants. I love that they have taken the initiative to put their talents to work in the Lord’s service. I love the energy and passion with which they pursue their self-appointed ministries. I love that they are constantly looking for new and better ways to work for the Lord. They are Barnabases, looking to help and encourage anyone that they can. They are Dorcases, loving people and meeting their needs. They are Aquillas and Priscillas, privately working with people to bring them closer to Christ. I am so thankful for these silent servants. I would love to tell you who they are and all about the great work that they are doing, but I will not because they wouldn’t want me to. They don’t want to be in the spotlight and are not looking for recognition. They simply want to bring glory to the Lord through their lives and service. Thank God for silent servants!

Chase Park is greatly blessed with talented servants. Some are willing to fill roles that require visibility while others quietly work in the background. Both groups are vitally important to the church’s success and deserve our encouragement and gratitude. Take a moment today to thank one of these servants for what they do.
